

A sea of PV

main facts

Location	Barcelona
Client	Barcelona City Council
Architect	AAO
Year	2011
Area	10,000 m <sup>2</sup>
Program	Cultural and public space
Collaboration	AAO, BBDO, BBDO, BBDO
Partners	BBDO, BBDO, BBDO
Collaboration	BBDO, BBDO, BBDO
Partners	BBDO, BBDO, BBDO

Team Building process

The first thought I had in that sense to design public space in Barcelona was to look at the most important public space in the city: the Plaça de Catalunya. I wanted to create a public space that would be a new landmark in the city, a place where people would want to go. I wanted to create a public space that would be a new landmark in the city, a place where people would want to go. I wanted to create a public space that would be a new landmark in the city, a place where people would want to go.

concept

I also decided to have a very fluid facade, inspired by the architecture of Antoni Gaudí. The idea was to create a facade that would be a new landmark in the city, a place where people would want to go. I wanted to create a facade that would be a new landmark in the city, a place where people would want to go.

public walkability

I wanted to create a public space that would be a new landmark in the city, a place where people would want to go. I wanted to create a public space that would be a new landmark in the city, a place where people would want to go.

